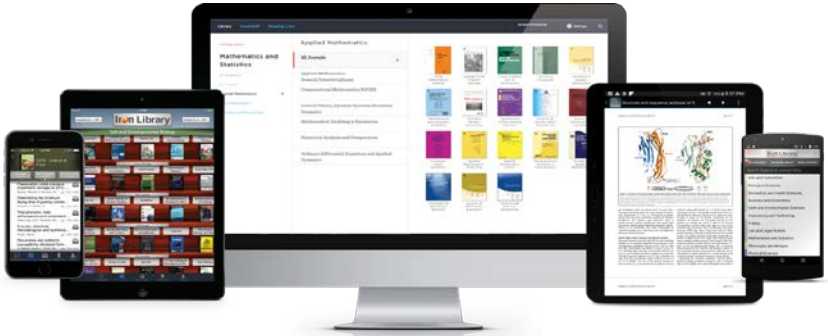
BrowZine

A scholarly journal engagement tool

Scholarly journals at the John Jay Library

1. How many scholarly journals can you access at John Jay?
1. How many of those are available only as e-journals?
1. Which journal titles are downloaded the most?
1. How many students will need to use scholarly journals?

Why use BrowZine?

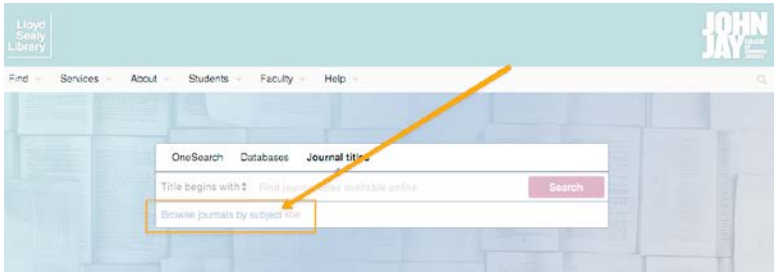


1. To follow top scholarly journals
2. To save scholarly articles to read later
3. To teach students about research in context

Note: BrowZine cannot be used to search for the title or the full text of journal articles

Ways to Access

1. On the open web @ BrowZine.com
2. From the library homepage by going to Journal Titles



1. Download BrowZine app to your mobile device

Key differences
Web-version vs. Mobile apps

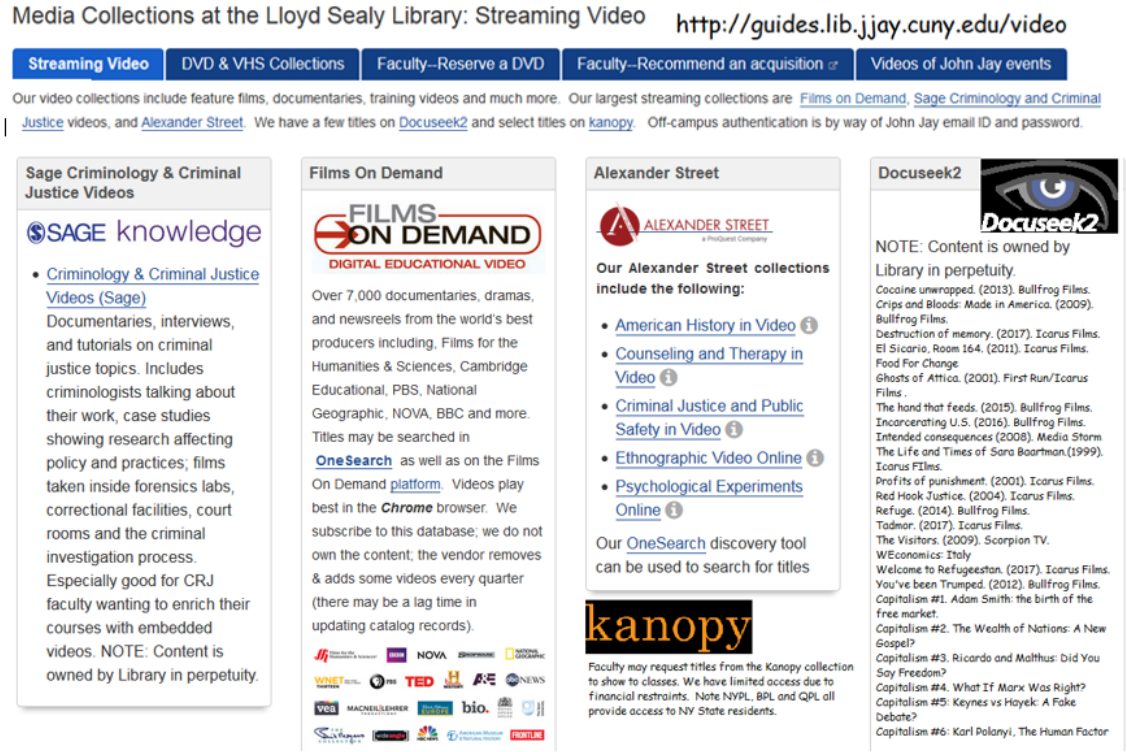
BrowZine Web
(accessed through a library link or on the open web through a browser)

- All periodical titles available through the library – not just scholarly journal titles available in BrowZine– are included in lookup, even those not available for browsing (e.g. newspapers, magazines – New York Times, Good Housekeeping). Links to the library website will be provided for periodicals not available in BrowZine.
- To read articles click on the title which will take you out of BrowZine to the publishers website.
- You can only sort journals in a subject area by journal rank (SJR –SCImago Journal ranking) in the Web-version.

BrowZine Mobile Apps

- Only BrowZine-enabled scholarly journal titles are available in the mobile apps including back issues to 2005.
- Selecting an article will retrieve the full text and display it within the BrowZine interface for easy reading

Streaming video collections



DVDs are available for classroom showing, and for viewing in the library; browse the list or search for specific titles in OneSearch.

Social Explorer demographic profiles

- Search by ZIP code, county, state, “place” (town/city)
  - No NYC neighborhood level; ZIP is the closest we get
- Dataset: Census Bureau American Community Survey (ACS) 5-year estimates
- Assignment idea
  - Students guess demographic stats for their zip code, e.g., how many people in their area are living below the poverty line? Then they compare their guesses to the Social Explorer profile. What were their assumptions? What was surprising?

Crime, Criminology and Civil Liberties: Archives of the Howard League for Penal Reform, The Howard Journal
Universal History Archive/UIG / Bridgeman Images

Overview

This collection contains the archives of the Howard League for Penal Reform from 1921 to 1971. Formed in 1921 from the merger of the Howard Association and the Penal Reform League, this organization is the oldest penal reform organization in the world.

The centerpiece of the collection is the organization's journal, the Howard Journal. It contains articles on both philosophical and practical aspects of punishment. Preventative detention, penal servitude, suicide, solitary confinement, group work and therapeutic communities, treatment for mental illness, reformatories, parole and after-care, prison diets, and the death penalty are all discussed in its pages. It examines the treatment of alcoholics, sex offenders, juveniles, children, and mothers in prison. Comparative analyses of systems in the United States, Canada, India, China, Prussia, Russia, Hungary, Burma, South Africa, and New Zealand broaden the journal's concerns to an international scope. The journal also examines the major players in the criminal justice system—including the police force, legal aid, and public defenders—as well as medical and psychiatric services in f prison issues, the journal contains articles of historical rison reform and the League of Nations, and reflections on prison in wartime during the 1940s. The journal also reflects broader social trends such as the inclusion of women in police forces and the greater use of sociological data to anticipate and track crime.

Finally, the collection contains the records of the organization itself, including the organization's original policy statement, a history of the Howard League and its parent organizations, financial and funding issues, reports of annual meetings, and a membership application.
